Historical Note

On January 29, 1886, a group of class-taught Christian Scientists organized the National Christian Scientist Association (NCSA). Another group, the Christian Scientist Association (CSA), was already in existence; it was open only to Mary Baker Eddy's students. Unlike the CSA, the NCSA was open to the students of Eddy's students (Eddy's students were individuals who had completed a Normal class at the Massachusetts Metaphysical College and were themselves Christian Science teachers.) According to a February 1886 report in The Christian Science Journal, the purpose of the new group was "to place students' students on equal footing with others in Christian Science, and to promote unity and brotherly love."

In an era of great growth and expansion for the Christian Science movement, the NCSA had the ability to grant charters to local associations, called Students' Christian Scientist Associations. This helped to connect local communities of Christian Scientists on a national level. An annual meeting held in various cities (Boston in 1886 and 1887; Chicago in 1888; Cleveland in 1889; and New York City in 1890) brought together delegates from these associations and helped to bridge the distances between Christian Scientists in different parts of the country. In addition to its role chartering and managing branch associations, Eddy gave the NCSA publishing control over The Christian Science Journal in June 1889. At this same time, a period in which the Christian Science movement was in a state of structural reorganization, Eddy directed the NCSA to develop a committee "to look after church work and organization" (see "Official Minutes of Fourth Annual Meeting, N.C.S. Association," The Christian Science Journal, July 1889).

At the NCSA's 1890 annual meeting in New York City, a message from Eddy was read, advising the NCSA to dissolve. Acknowledging the power of students themselves to manage associations and branch churches, Eddy believed the time involved in organizing the NCSA could be better spent on other pursuits. She instructed the NCSA to meet again in three years. It did so at the Parliament of the World's Religions, held at the 1893 World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago. Despite not having held an annual meeting in the interim, the NCSA had continued to approve charters, publish the Journal, and work to sustain the growing Christian Science movement. But as Eddy advised, students' associations continued to become increasingly independent, evolving into the Christian Science students' associations that exist today.

Scope and Content Note

The National Christian Scientist Association Records contain correspondence; charter applications, certificates, forms, and related documents; financial records; meeting records and reports; and membership applications. In particular the collection contains applications for charters, correspondence on dues and per capita taxes, and annual reports, all from the Students' Christian Scientist Associations. These operated under the direction of the NCSA. The materials in this collection are organized into five series:

Series I. General Correspondence, 1886–1896, n.d.

Series II. Charters, Certificates, and Forms, 1885–1896, n.d.

Series III. Financial Records, 1886–1895, n.d.

Series IV. Meeting Records, 1886–1896, n.d.

Series V. Membership Records, 1885–1897, n.d.

Series I, General Correspondence, consists of letters; telegrams; form letters; copies of letters; and drafts of letters on various topics related to the NCSA, including the business of the organization, questions about membership, requests for information, and other issues.

Series I is arranged chronologically and described at the item level.

Series II, Charters, Certificates, and Forms, includes applications for charters and related correspondence; correspondence regarding certificates issued by teachers to students; and blank examples of charters, certificates, and forms used by members and branch associations of the NCSA. Applications for charters for Students' Christian Scientist Associations date between February 1886 and June 1896, along with undated applications. Supplementary correspondence regarding charters is included, primarily consisting of cover letters sent with applications and fees, as well as questions about application procedures. Correspondence related to certificates includes requests from teachers for blank certificates to give their students on completing classes. Also present in this series are blank examples of charters, applications for charters, annual report forms, representative certificates for annual meetings, and class certificates.

Materials in Series II are arranged by object type and chronologically within folders. Blank items are grouped together by document type. Materials are described at the item level.

Series III, Financial Records, contains financial statements, receipts, records, and reports of the NCSA and its business, as well as correspondence on financial matters. Records and receipts document the payment of taxes and dues owed to the NCSA, as well as expenses for annual meetings (including the rental of meeting spaces and the printing of programs and forms). Additional financial documents highlight the services provided by outside vendors, as well as NCSA officers. Financial correspondence is largely made up of letters accompanying per capita tax payments from Students' Christian Scientist Associations and dues paid by individual members, along with some letters requesting information on taxes and dues.

Series III is arranged first by object type. Materials in folders are arranged chronologically and described at the item level.

Series IV, Meeting Records, consists of materials related to NCSA meetings, particularly annual meetings. Material types include correspondence, reports, lists of delegates, representative certificates, and programs. Annual meetings of the NCSA from 1886 to 1890 are documented in this series. Annual reports from Students' Christian Scientist Associations comprise the majority of the series and include reports from 1887 to 1898.

Materials in Series IV are arranged by object type and chronologically within folders. They are described at the item level.

Series V, Membership Records, includes membership applications to the NCSA. Some applications for the Christian Scientist Association were filed alongside NCSA applications and are included in this series. Applications include completed forms, as well as handwritten notes and letters. Some applications feature endorsements from teachers, including Eddy. Applications from students of Mary W. Monroe are present and date from May to November 1897.

These are handwritten on regular paper, rather than forms, and endorsed by Munroe.

Series V is first arranged by type of application (general, then students of Munroe). They are arranged chronologically. An index of applications is available.

Related Collections

Materials related to this collection can be found in the Subject File and in Early Organizational Records. Printed materials, including copies of the NCSA constitution and bylaws, meeting programs, and published reports, as well as manuscript materials donated by individuals, can be found in the Subject File.

The Christian Scientist Association Records, LSC025, contains materials documenting a related organization that Eddy established in 1876, which permitted membership only to her students.

Early Organizational Records of the National Christian Scientist Association consists of eight books kept by the organization. They include meeting minutes, membership rolls, account books, and ledgers. The records of related early organizations, such as the CSA, can also be found here.
