Scope and Content Note:

The Historic Bible Collection began to take form in the 1930s, when William Pitfield, a Christian Scientist in England, donated a number of rare Bibles to the Church of Christ, Scientist. Pitfield soon brought to the attention of the Christian Science Board of Directors other volumes that they could acquire, which he thought would be of value to the growing collection.

A letter from the Directors to Pitfield gives their original criteria for adding to the Bible collection: "... our interest lies in editions which indicate steps in the history of mankind or which have been of great benefit or value to a large number of people—volumes which, perhaps, represent turning points in history—rather than unusual or rare versions of the Bible." [Board of Directors to Pitfield, 25 June 1936, Organizational Archives.]

Several Bibles in the collection mark "firsts" in the thousand-year evolution of the modern Bible. These include first editions of the King James, Coverdale and Matthew's Bibles. Three copies of the Bible as translated by Julia E. Smith (1792-1886) are included. Smith was the first woman to translate the complete Bible into English. Additionally, milestones are represented in the publication of the Bible in the United States, such as the first volume printed in New Hampshire.

The complete collection (which came from multiple donors) also includes 12 texts authored by Swiss theologian Rudolph Gwalther (1519–1586), as well as early copies of the Bishops' Bible and the Geneva Bible. There are volumes designed by typographers John Baskerville (1706–1775) and Bruce Rogers (1870–1957), and a copy of the twenty-third Psalm, illustrated by Paolo Antonio Paschetto (1885–1963).

Other items include Bible reference, devotional, and related books. There are 471 volumes, including two copies of the Koran that were gifted to the Church.

Languages represented include English, Eskimo, Danish, Dutch, French, Gaelic, German, Hebrew, Hungarian, Icelandic, Portuguese, Swedish, and Welsh.
